PRE-LAW

The Student Experience (continued)

- Guidance choosing an academically rigorous major will encourage the competencies that law school admission committees seek, including communication skills; critical, creative, and reflective thinking skills; and a developed understanding of American institutions and values.
- Choose course work in the areas of philosophical, religious, and ethical principles (GPR) and reasoning and discourse (GRD). Courses in these areas are offered by departments including:
 - Anthropology
 - Business
 - Communication Studies
 - English
 - History
 - Philosophy
 - Political Science
 - Religious Studies
 - Sociology

Additional Information

Admission to law school depends on a high GPA and strong scores on the Law School Admissions Test (LSAT).
